

Damnably Unbelievers

October 18, 2009

The fact is, they enjoyed their sins so much that they did not want to believe the truth, 2 Thessalonians 2:12. I think that may have been true for Hegel back in the 1800's when he fathered Nihilism, which was a kind of anti-establishment philosophy. The establishment for him and many others was the powerful influence of Christ in the lives of Europeans who tried very hard to be scrupulously clean and morally pure in the eyes of their families and loved ones. That took all of the fun out of seducing one's neighbor's wife or daughter. Being born out of wed-lock caused one to wear a reproachful title, which even today is called strong language and gets a movie an "R" rating or at the very least "PG-13". There was a whole generation that did not appreciate the beauty of holiness as provided by the godly influence of God-fearing men and women. They questioned the truthfulness of the Bible in the hopes of discrediting the standards that held back their lecherous goals. Hoards of scholars eagerly joined their efforts to sound intelligent while denying the divine inspiration of the New Testament writings. They have given us Charles Darwin and Karl Marx who in turn have given us the Theory of Evolution and Atheistic Communism and so much more. They have given us death and destruction on a massive scale. As lamentable as is the death of so many innocents, the destruction of carefully built social protections for the purity of our youth is an even greater tragedy. Young teen-age boys seem entitled to touch, poke, prod, and tickle the tender virgins cheapening them until they are willing to surrender their priceless virtue to a pimple-faced child. The heart-break that follows marks that girl for the rest of her life. God in heaven cries out in anger, "Keep your dirty hands to yourself!" Our girls cannot wear a dress to school unless she wants some uninhibited Cretin to grab at her hem and expose her just to hear her scream. Why do we put up with this? Where is this boy's daddy? Aha! That is the problem, isn't it. Our homes are destroyed, we are descending into chaos and our public places are often like jungles. Our homes are destroyed because the social protections that we once had were torn down as remnants of a faith in the Bible that has been lost. That faith actually was not lost but rather it was systematically attacked by our schools, teachers, and scientists who have told us there is nothing remarkable about the virtue of a woman as a woman: nothing that needs to be protected by careful social customs. tp
